HI GUYS,

Welcome to another Monday! Sorry to Adriana and Alicja, who pushed through the night running on three hours of sleep (or less!). Y’all — go to bed lmao. Thanks to Madison for joining us as a guest from Thursday! Students turn to sad clocks!

Don’t forget that there’s a meeting today at 9 p.m. and there’s a breakfast social this Saturday!

I was going to put a few paragraphs of the “scholars” column here, but then I thought that was a little too mean spirited.

Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits

Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits

Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits

Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits Much deposits
SOME NOTES

• Don’t forget to check the hyphenation of compound modifiers! You guys caught most of these, but a few slipped through. Day-to-day operations, four-game win streak.

• Other style issues: nonprofit has no hyphen, in the ’70s, OK not okay, 200-meter not 200m, co-founder not cofounder (because it’s an occupation or status).

• Don’t forget to include the years of players on teams that don’t have positions, e.g. golf.

• Use who instead of that in reference to people. Guest speakers who speak.

• Spell out months if not part of a full date. October 2017, not Oct. 2017.

• In general, if a person’s title is four or more words, it goes after their name. If it’s three or less, it goes before. I make a few exceptions if breaking the rule helps out with the flow or the sentence or whatever.

• In general, the attribution for a quote should be after the first sentence.

• Notice the proper placement of said before the name in this attribution. “The taste of your lips — I’m on a ride,” said Britney Spears, an original skinny legend queen goddess. “You’re toxic I’m slippin’ under with a taste of a poison paradise.”

• Don’t forget to check webheads and captions! Make sure there are only single quotes in headlines, there aren’t articles, blah blah …

• Try not to give up looking for facts and then leave a note that it was too hard to find lmao. They might be easier to get than you think! And the author or someone from the department can always be a resource.
HAVE AN AWESOME WEEK!